Sermon Reflection Questions

1. How does Romans 13:1-7 inform our understanding of the relationship between Christians and governing authorities? What are the implications for our attitudes and actions as believers?
2. In light of the instructions given in Romans 13:1-7, how do we balance our allegiance to God and our responsibility to obey earthly authorities? What are some practical examples or challenges we may face in living out this balance?
3. Romans 13:1-7 speaks of governmental authorities as "ministers of God". How does this perspective shape our understanding of the purpose and role of the government? How can we actively engage as Christians in promoting justice and righteousness in our society?
